

MATTHEW CRANDALL

Dr. Matthew Crandall is an associate professor of International Relations at Tallinn University where he also defended his PhD (2016). His areas of research include Small state security and US foreign policy.

Crandall completed a master's degree in EU-Russian Studies from the University of Tartu (2010) and a bachelor's degree from Brigham Young University (USA) in Political Science (2007). He has published in Contemporary Security Policy, Defence Studies, and East European Politics, and his major field of research is small state foreign and security policies.

